Hours:

Synopsis of the talk

"Parsons The New School for Design in New York City is developing a new approach to the design of cities. The approach emerges out of years of reflective on-the-ground practice, critical research on the state of the field, and experimental studio and seminar pedagogies. There are two main components to the approach: one is to focus on the invisible yet powerful structures that actually shape cities, and the second is to adopt a highly interdisciplinary and collaborative strategy. The presentation will describe this approach using case studies of actual projects and present how Parsons is helping shape a radically different group of urban practitioners. There will be time for comments and questions from the audience."

Should you be interested, please contact the HKIP Secretarial Staff, Ms. Monique Tai at 29156212 or mail to hkiplann@netvigator.com on or before 5 August 2013 (Monday).
